In the current globalization period, small businesses run, but a lot of research and analysis is forced to do. Without such research, new techniques cannot be introduced and no success in the current industrial war can be achieved without injecting new techniques. An analysis that is very useful for the industry in that respect is SWOT Analysis. SWOT Analysis is used to set targets, provide the necessary information to plan, to analyze the pros and cons of achieving the goal, and to provide information necessary to start a new business. SWOT Analysis Strengths (Strengths) Weaknesses (Weaknesses), Opportunities (Opportunities) Threats (Threats) SWOT Analysis is used to detect weaknesses and opportunities, threats. We can identify the strengths, weaknesses and opportunities of our organization by asking and answering various questions. Internal and external factors: - Internal and external factors - strengths and weaknesses depend on factors related to the company - price, product, marketing, sales, finance, production, employees... Etc. External factors – opportunities and threats (external factors for the company – technical change, economy, government), government, competitors, social etc. It is important for companies to know their strengths before planning. Many things that are in the company's advantage are the strengths of the company. What are the things that are better than the other company in our company? What are the unique features of our company than other company products? What resources can be purchased at a lower price than others? What do consumers and people consider to be strengths of our company? What talent and energy does our company have in the employees of the other company? Which way do the products of our company differ from other products? What unique methods of sales do we have? The answers to this type of question are our strengths. High quality, cheap price, popular brand name, financial resources, no debt, efficient staff, good governance, improved technology, fast production are the many. All we've seen in strength strives to relate to our competitors. Quality is not our strength as our competitor sells high-quality products. Identifying weaknesses helps to manage and improve the business. The disadvantages of our company are weaknesses of the company. Weaknesses should be seen not only from the standpoint of the company, but also from the views of consumers and people. What are the factors that affect our sales? What are the things we need to improve better than others? In which way do we lurch behind others? What factors do we influence? What do consumers and people consider weaknesses of our company and our products? Our weaknesses are the answers we get when we raise many such questions. Festive season is an opportunity for jewelry. Threats: The obstacles and vulnerabilities we face in the external situation are for our threats. We need to take these threats into account. Changes in Technology could threaten us (Changes in Technology perhaps threats to us), poor infrastructure pathways, ports, power and so on., and the arrival of new competitors (The entry of new competitors, inflation, economic recession, adverse government policies, public reluctance to spend, etc. are all threats. Some of the things available for certain products may be threats to other company products. Rainy seasons are the possibility for umbrella manufacturers, but that's the threat to ice cream companies.
